Chapter 1 by Payton Barnett

She believed her world was full of wonders. She finally found someone who she thought she truly loved. To her surprise, the guy she had found wasn't what she thought. He was way worse.

Chapter 2 by Hanna Tolander

She found out when her best friend Meg called her and said: "We need to talk."

They sat in their favorite spot at their favorite coffeehouse, Meg nervously nursing a cup of blackcurrant tea, and the girl who was about to become heartbroken happily enjoying a piece of rhubarb pie and a glass of milk.

She had no idea, of course, but this was the last piece of rhubarb pie she'd eat in her life. From now on she wouldn't be able to stand anything with rhubarb in it. It would forever be connected to the happiness that she could no longer feel.

Meg cleared her throat, putting her cup down on the red-and-white table cloth.

"Biden came on tv."
